Warrant Out for Journal

Newspaper Sluggers

A warrant has been sworn out for a driver of a delivery wagon of the Daily Journal, charging him with assault upon Albert Muskovitch, a newsdealer at S. Paulina and W. 12th streets.

Muskovitch, in making his complaint at the Maxwell street station, said he bought twenty papers from the driver, though he only sold three. When Muskovitch told the driver he would take but three papers in the future, the driver is alleged to have beaten him severely. Muskovitch was confined to his room several days.

When he went back to his old stand to resume business this week, he found it had been taken away, and another newsdealer was occupying the corner.

Detective Walsh and Sullivan from the Maxwell street station are searching for the alleged slugger, whose name is unknown to Muskovitch. They say they'll get the slugger if it takes a week.

Dining Rooms Modestly Furnished

had counted her wedding gifts.

For the bride whose choice of dining room furnishing is all her own, simplicity and quiet good taste at the minimum of expense should be the keynote of her shopping.

The cost of the linen outfit will be
